Join us for a presentation by Florida Department of Health's Director of Public Health Research, Keshia Reid, PhD. In her role, Dr. Reid oversees the Biomedical Research program as well as several non-infectious disease surveillance and epidemiology programs, including environmental, injury, drug overdose, and occupational epidemiology; population-based health surveys; and the Florida cancer and birth defects registries.

Dr. Reid will discuss DOH's new Human Trafficking Dashboard hosted in Florida CHARTS (Community Health Assessment Resource Tool Set), which offers a data-driven human trafficking profile for the state of Florida.

Identifying and Assisting Minor Male Victims of Trafficking

When we talk about sex trafficking, we often focus on adult females and young girls and fail to include boys in the conversation. Despite this oversight, the Department of Justice estimates that 36% of minor sex trafficking victims are boys.

In this training, provided by John Long, the Executive Director of the U.S. Institute of Human Trafficking, we will look at the under-identified and under-reported minor male victims of sex trafficking.

We will discuss how boys are recruited and how they are forced to stay in the life. Participants will also learn how to better identify minor male victims of trafficking.

This is an open forum series, all are welcome to attend.
